

CINERAMA THEATRES WORLDWIDE.

[Including CineMiracle, Kinopanorama and D-150].

18th Edition.

Theatre No 1: Broadway Theatre, New York. 30 September 1952.

Listed here are all 288 theatres known to us. They did not all exist at the same time. Some replaced earlier theatres as leases ran out, policies changed etc. It is virtually impossible to ascertain the current status of many theatres. Where this is known the information is given.

Whilst most theatres lost their 3-strip equipment when converted to 70mm, a few kept both systems. 3-strip equipment was normally cascaded to other theatres after conversion to 70mm.

Cinerama and CineMiracle normally used Century Projectors modified for the process, but, in Europe, both Philips and Cinemeccanica supplied Cinerama equipment from the early sixties. All 3-Strip installations are believed to have used triple projection booths unless otherwise indicated.

The symbol * after the theatre name indicates one of the original group of 45 theatres opened before 31-12-59. Of these only 5 are known to have screened 3-Strip uninterrupted until single strip was introduced.

The Theatre numbering is based on published lists of opening dates and ignores any subsequent closures. Theatres are listed under their names to avoid confusion, though they were usually known by the town's name followed by 'Cinerama'.

For example, the REGAL, ANYTOWN became the ANYTOWN CINERAMA.

Three different degrees of curvature were used over the years for the screens. Originally all screens were 146 degrees of arc. These used a 120 degree curve with the extra 13 degrees at either side straightened out. Due to structural problems, where the loss of seating to install the 3 projection boxes for Cinerama would be unacceptable, some theatres were fitted with 120 degree screens, i.e. slightly less deeply curved. All these screens were louvred, comprising upwards of 1100 individual 1 inch wide strips.

From the mid-sixties 90 degree screens, usually single sheet, were sometimes fitted to alleviate focus and distortion problems.

For the purposes of this list, Cinerama Theatres, both 3-Strip and 70mm are defined as having had one of the above type screens, using (in the case of 70mm), Cinerama Camera Corporation projection lenses to correct focus and having displayed the Cinerama Logo on the Theatre Marquee. However a little flexibility has been necessary in the compiling of this list. Opening dates quoted are for Cinerama and not that for the theatre unless specified.

CINEMIRACLE INSTALLATIONS.

CineMiracle was only installed temporarily for short seasons. There were several portable installations which toured the U.S.A. Basicly similar to Cinerama, CineMiracle used a less deeply curved screen and its three projectors used mirrors to project the side panels. The panel joins were masked by vignettes, graded fades to black, printed on the film at the frame sides instead of Cinerama's reciprocating combs (jigolos). From 13-08-58 Cinerama Theatres were allowed to play WINDJAMMER, the only CineMiracle production completed, under an arrangment between Cinerama Inc, the Stanley Warner Cinerama Corporation and National Theatres, the rights to WINDJAMMER and the CineMiracle process being finally purchased by Cinerama Inc on 18-12-61.

CineMiracle Studios: Mt Eden Theatre. Bronx. N.Y. Seen 80ft x 34ft.
(No Trace 1992).

NOTE. 'No Trace' indicates that despite specific enquiries we have been unable to ascertain the theatre's current status. This may be due to closure and change of usage, demolition or a name change.

Where a theatre is listed as currently open, this does not necessarily mean that it is still equipped with a Cinerama screen.

List compiled from original lists, member's reports and published information. Special thanks to Kirk Besse, Willem Boumeester, Thomas Hauerslev, Roland Lataille and David Coles and his International Cinerama Research Institute.
